

CIA 2.04.2 Students
Sherburne, Phil
P. Metzler, Ken

Old Oregon

Roundup

We go behind the news

In spite of the storm of publicity accompanying the recent exposure of the secret relationship between the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and the National Student Association (NSA), it's likely that most American citizens still have only a rather vague idea of what the relationship was really like or the key role played in bringing about the break between the two by Phil Sherburne, former NSA president and former U.O. student-body president.

Sherburne's complete story appears for the first time in this issue of OLD OREGON (page 6), in an exclusive interview by Ken Metzler, OLD OREGON editor now on sabbatical. The 24-year-old Sherburne, now a Harvard law student, talked frankly to his old friend from back home, and we take considerable pride in being able to illuminate in this fashion one of the darker corners of current American history.